Workshop Part 1: Genre and genre-based pedagogy

This paper discusses major characteristics of genre-based pedagogy as a form of explicit instruction toward fostering learner processing of meaning-form connections at the textual level. It presents a move analysis of the genre political appeal to demonstrate these connections with regard to the generic stages.

I. Introduction: Goals of Genre-Based Pedagogy

2. Progressivist approach
3. Action and Reflection literacy (Hasan 1996)

II. Linguistic Theory

2. Genre theory:
   - Genres are staged, goal-oriented social processes
   - Level of culture $\rightarrow$ generic stages (obligatory and optional moves)
   - Level of situation $\rightarrow$ field - activity, subject matter
     - tenor - relationship between participants
     - mode - role of language, information flow
   - Level of lexicogrammar $\rightarrow$ field - ex. transitivity
     - tenor - ex. mood system
     - mode - ex. theme

III. Genre-based Pedagogy

3. Explicit Instruction
   a. Critique: reproduction of dominant discourses
   b. New Wheel: joint construction, independent construction, deconstruction
   d. Explicit instruction from a genre-based perspective: explicit but not prescriptive, explicit with regard to meaning-form-context connections, and discourse-level phenomena.

IV. Theoretical and Empirical Bases for Genre-based Instruction

1. Learning theory: Scaffolding, Vygotsky (1978) $\rightarrow$ support an instructor can offer at the point when it is most needed, i.e. in the zone of proximal development.
2. Modelling and Joint Construction phases provide scaffolding that leads to approximation and control of genres.
V: Analysis of Political Appeals

1. Curriculum Context: Advanced level course on modern German history offered after 15 semester hours of coursework, Unit III: Fall of the Wall and its Consequences, Topic 1: Looking Back and "Ostalgie" ("East-nostalgia")

2. Socio-historical context:
   a. history of the genre of political appeal
   b. historical context of the Fall of Berlin Wall in 1989

3. Methodology:
   a. three researchers analyzed two political appeals used in instruction and worked out a moves structure for them
   b. 9 political appeals from an online historical archive LeMO were further analyzed in accordance with the worked out moves structure. Each of the nine texts was examined by two researchers.
   c. Discrepancies were resolved. Moves structure was refined
   d. Moves across 11 political appeals were further qualitatively analyzed by one researcher with regard to their linguistic realizations in terms of field, tenor, and mode.

4. Moves Analysis: obligatory and optional moves, purposes of moves

5. Linguistic Realizations of Moves: Problem Statement and Appeal for Action across 11 Auffuhr in terms of field, tenor, mode

| Communicative purposes of the moves of the genre "Auffuhr" (political appeal) |
|---|---|
| I. Title – to draw attention, set up topic | What is this about? |
| II. Address – to identify and address the audience, to create rapport with it | Whom are you talking to? |
| III. Contextualization – to contextualise the appeal via mentioning any of the following: the body that created the Auffuhr, the conditions under which the authors met (i.e., their responsibilities, titles, whom they represent, etc.), the place where they met. Additional functions: to introduce the main purpose of the Auffuhr, to vary generally summarise it. | What’s the background to the text and the authors? |
| IV. Problem statement – to identify and/or describe the main problem that is the reason for the Auffuhr. | What’s the problem? |
| V. Recognition of achievements – to positively evaluate actions that have already been taken (often by the audience) to overcome the problems related to the main problem. Additional function: to create rapport with the audience; to encourage it to keep reading/listening; to give hope that the problems can be overcome. | What successful actions have been undertaken? Why do you think I can do anything? |
| VI. Proposed action or Call for action – to propose one or several alternatives for action to overcome the main problem identified in move IV, to urge audience to become involved, to answer audience’s question “What can I do?” If several alternatives are | What can be done to solve the problem? |
| VII. | Argument for action – to present reasons for taking a certain course of actions. | Why should I take part in the proposed action? |
| VIII. | Date/Place – to anchor the Aufruf temporally and geographically as a historic/political document | When and where was this appeal officially agreed upon? |
| IX. | Signatures – to give audience a chance to express solidarity, to demonstrate how many people agree with the evaluation of the problem and proposed course of action | Who officially consented to this appeal? |

Structure of the genre Aufruf

I. Title – obligatory, ordered (always first), unrepeated
II. Address – optional, unordered (can be embedded within Title), repeated
III. Contextualization – optional, unordered, repeated
IV. Problem statement – obligatory, unordered, unrepeated (tends to occur in the first part of the Aufruf and before “Proposed action or Call for action” move)
V. Recognition of achievements – optional, unordered (but tends to occur together with Problem statement and can be embedded in it), repeated
VI. Appeal for action – obligatory, unordered (but tends to occur after Problem statement), repeated (when repeated – is intensified the second or subsequent time)
VII. Argument for action – optional, ordered (when it is present, it comes before and/or “Proposed action or Call for action” move), repeated
VIII. Date/Place – optional, ordered (occurs either after Title (or contextualization) in the beginning or before Signatures at the end), unrepeated
IX. Signatures – optional, ordered (last move), unrepeated

Moves that define the genre of Aufruf (moves that are obligatory): Title, Problem statement, Appeal for action (there are examples of this genre that consist solely of these three moves!)

Schematic structure (bolded = obligatory move, […] = optional move, ↓ = repeated move, -- = unordered move):

Für unser Land

PROBLEM STATEMENT

RECOGNITION OF ACHIEVEMENT
Gewalttätigkeit, durch Massenprotesten hat der Volk den Prozeß der revolutionären Erneuerung, der sich in ständig wachsender Ordnungsfähigkeit vollzogen.

APPEAL FOR ACTION
Uns bleibt nur wenig Zeit, auf die vermeidbaren Möglichkeiten Einfluß zu nehmen, die sich aus der Krise ergeben.

Entwickler
können wir auf die Zuständigkeit der DDR beruhen und verzuken, mit allen unseren Kräften und in Zusammenarbeit mit demigen Stäben und Intelligenteigruppen, die dazu bereit sind, in unserem Land eine sozialistische Gesellschaft zu entwickeln, in der Frieden und soziale Gerechtigkeit, Freiheit des einzelnen, Freiheit als Kultur und die Bewahrung der Umwelt gewährleistet sind.

Oder
sei ihnen zuversichtlich, daß, voraussichtlich durch starke exzessive Züge und durch unangemessene Bedingungen, an die nicht nur durch die DDR gereicht ist, das neue vessels ist, die die DDRs recht in der DDRs der DDR konsequent, ein Anschluß an unseren materiellen und moralischen Wille beginnt und über kurz oder lang die Deutsche Demokratische Republik durch die Bundesrepublik Deutschland vermutet wird.

Lakt auf den ersten Weg gehen.

ARGUMENT FOR ACTION
Noch haben wie die Chancen, in gleichberechtigter Verhältnis zu allem Staat zu einer sozialistischen Alternative zur Bundesrepublik zu entwickeln. Noch können wir bestürzen und die sozialistischen Ideen, um von der einen sozialistischen Alternativen zu entwickeln.

APPEAL FOR ACTION
Alle Bürger und Bürgerinnen, die uns Hoffnung und unsere Sorge teilen, ruft auf, sich auf diesem Appell durch ihre Unterschriften auszudrücken.

LETTER (Kerry Edwards campaign)

ADDRESS
Dear Haram,

JUSTIFICATION FOR ACTION
Whether John Kerry or George Bush sits in the White House for the next four years is up to us. The commitment you make throughout the final month of this campaign will decide this election.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF PAST CONTRIBUTION
You've helped get us to this point. You helped raise more than $1.6 million online for the Democratic Party in September -- an incredible new record.

SPECIFIC APPEAL
Now, we've got to raise $20 million during the final month of this campaign.

HOW-TO
https://www.democrats.org/support/kerry.html
For one last time, we need your help to meet three October deadlines.

JUSTIFICATION FOR ACTION
Your actions during the next four weeks will mean the difference between victory or defeat for John Kerry, John Edwards, and Democrats down the ticket. Our first critical deadline is just two days away at midnight on Friday, October 8 -- just hours after John Kerry and George Bush meet in their next debate.

ASSURANCE
The money raised this week will guide critical decisions about the advertising aired in the crucial swing states.

Our goal this week is to raise an extra $5 million for vitally important ads. With that kind of support, the Democratic Party will use an aggressive ad campaign to build on the momentum stemming from the strong debate performances of John Kerry and John Edwards to help the entire ticket win this November 2.

SPECIFIC APPEAL
Help us meet our goal.

HOW-TO
https://www.democrats.org/support/kerry.html

JUSTIFICATION FOR ACTION
Two other deadlines loom right around the corner. By midnight on October 15, the final decisions about priorities in swing states must be made, and on October 27, the online fundraising drive must be finished if the money we raise is going to do us any good.

ASSURANCE
By that point, the Democratic Party must have all its money in hand as you and other loyal supporters help pour resources into the most extensive get-out-the-vote effort in our nation's history.

JUSTIFICATION FOR ACTION
Time is short. The stakes are high. And your determination to help our candidates pull through to victory counts for everything. To win this election, the Democratic Party must make every decision based on strategy, not finances. It's four weeks of hard work or four more years of Bush and Cheney. It is that simple.

GENERAL APPEAL
I want to end this message with the same words that we use to end our staff meetings here at headquarters.
Let's go win another day.

Workshop Part 2: Identifying the lexicogrammatical realization of generic moves

I. Salient Linguistic Realizations of 2 Obligatory Moves across 11 Political Appeals

Problem Statement

Field:
- Relational and existential processes: Present tense or stative passive voice are used to point to a currently existing problem and present it as an unquestionable fact
- Negatively connoted words and phrases are used to explain and underline the problem and appeal to the audience’s emotions:
  o words that denote destruction, cruelty, war, hunger, death, crisis
  o words that denote lack of something, deficit
  o verbs in the passive voice that denote a powerful/compulsive action and presuppose a passive subject
  o words that denote politically inefficient authoritative societal mechanisms, Stalinism
  o words or phrases that denote hindrance, difficulties for further development
- Words that indicate change are used to point to the transitional historical moment or moment of crisis

Tenor:
- “We”, “our” are used to refer to the authors and audience of the Aufruf. Can be seen as a salient alignment strategy, desire to show “we are in the same boat.”

Mode:
- Participants or problematic aspects are thematized

Appeal for Action:

Field:
- Negatively connotated words used in Problem Statement are repeated in the Appeal for Action but in the function of a bad alternative (not a real alternative) to appeal to the negative emotions of the audience
- Positively connotated words in the function of a good alternative (vocabulary that describes a democracy) are used to call for a specific action
- Words that refer to struggle are used to appeal for the necessity of action

Tenor:
- Use of “we”, “our”, “us” in ALL Aufrufe to identify with the audience and emphasize common goals.
- Words that emphasize cooperation and collective work that involves everybody are used to appeal for communal effort
- Modulation: Modality used to argue about obligation:
  o typical commands expressed through imperatives, material processes ("Act to the best of your knowledge") o modulated commands expressed through high explicit subjective obligation, verbal processes ("We appeal to all citizens... to become members of the New Forum")
  o modulated commands expressed through high implicit subjective obligation ("The Hitler system must be destroyed in the catastrophe of its defeat")
  o modulated commands expressed through high implicit objective obligation
    ("The fate of the Italian Fascism should await the German National Socialism")
  o modulated commands expressed through low implicit subjective obligation ("The Left in our country cannot afford... negative polarity")
  o modulated commands expressed through median implicit objective obligation ("On this basis a founding congress should be organized") o requests ("ask for your help")
  o indirect requests, subjective ("We need an open discussion")
  o indirect requests, objective ("That requires programmatic efforts and such citizens")
  o nominalizations of obligation and actions to be taken ("Minimal demands", "suggestion", "realization")

Mode:
- Participants are thematized; appeal for action is organized through thematization of constructions that point out alternatives ("either ... or...")
- Solutions to the crisis and proposed actions are thematized

I. Goals of this part of the workshop:
1) to discuss advantages of using genre-based tasks in advanced classrooms
2) to illustrate how genre-based instruction can be implemented
3) to demonstrate how to create genre-based writing assignments

II. Genre Framework

Genres are dynamic, goal-oriented, socially and culturally determined processes with typified rhetorical and linguistic patterns that help realize particular communicative purposes of their participants. (Systemic Functional Linguistics)

(Gee, 1998; Halliday, 1993; Halliday & Martin, 1993; see also Byrnes & Spang, 2004)

For curricular decision-making, genre represents an intermediary structure that links instructional content with long-term goals of language acquisition. For pedagogical decision-making, genre-informed tasks specify what is to be done with texts at a particular instructional level.

III. Implementation of genre-informed task-based instruction

Context: German Department, Georgetown University; Level III course “German Stories: German histories” (taught either as the third semester course of an intensive sequence or as the third year course of a non-intensive sequence, after 12 semester credit hours of instruction).

Focus of instruction: Genre Aufruf (Political or public appeal) in Unit III “The Fall of the Wall and its consequences”.

Szmuda (2001); language-activating tasks used to stretch current interlanguage resources and processing capacities of the learners vs. knowledge-constructing tasks used primarily to enable new form-meaning connections as part of a meaning → form → meaning progression.

A. Modeling phase:

Text 1: Für unser Land (For Our Country)
1. Contextualization: specification of meaning of the title (What is “our country”?): visual structure of the text (entweder/oder — ether/or), examination of signatures, date, place and their significance
2. Task sheet 1: together with Contextualization serves as a knowledge-constructing task (illuminates the area of discourse where knowledge will be created and serves as semantic priming to introduction of new language)
3. Definition of genre Political appeal; identification of its structure (moves) on the basis of the text
4. Parallel to 3: work with content (discussion of the proposed solution)
5. Identification of rhetorical devices typical of the genre Political appeal (on the basis of the text and with the help of Task sheet 2)

B. Modeling + Joint Negotiation of Text phase

Text 2: Appeal by Stefan Heym
1. Contextualization: information about the author, video tape with Heym presenting his appeal at a public demonstration in Berlin
2. Identification of the text structure (moves): comparison with the text structure of Für unser Land
3. Identification of rhetorical devices
4. Creation of a semantic field centered around the concept of power (based on Texts 1 & 2)

Text 3: Parody
1. Identification and comparison of parody’s text structure and rhetorical devices to Texts 1 and 2

C. Independent Construction of Text phase

Preparation for the writing assignment Political or public appeal:
1. Introduction of the task (on the basis of the Writing task sheet)
2. Discussion of possible topics (including light-hearted ones to create a parody effect)
3. Discussion of possible text structures (obligatory parts: problem statement, proposed solution(s), call for action)

IV. Concluding remarks

In comparison to traditional communicative task-based teaching, genre-informed task-based instruction:
• requires much higher levels of responsibility among practitioners for knowing the texts and genres as well as knowing how meanings are realized. Curricular setting creates this kind of shared knowledge base among practitioners;
• enables setting of long-term goals for language learning;
• enables literate, culturally appropriate language use through fostering development of secondary discourses;
• offers a way to sequence instructional content while relating it to the goals and trajectories of L2 development;
• caters to adult advanced L2 learners by capitalizing on their L1 literacy abilities;
• promotes culturally-based language use and supports native-like selection dubbed by Pawley and Sydner (1983) as one of the two puzzles for linguistic theory and by extension L2 development;
• fosters development of individual voice within stable yet flexible generic structures by creating texts in a socio-linguistically recognizable fashion.
Three Considerations for Writing Task Guidelines: Task Appropriateness, Content, and Language:

Task Appropriateness
- Is best understood in terms of generic moves
- Is further captured by positioning of writer to imagined reader-audience
- Metaphor: breadth of generic moves required by the genre and interpersonal tenor

Content
- Is best understood in terms of the information that writers provide in fulfillment of the moves
- Metaphor: depth of content/information

Language Focus
- Is best understood in terms of the three language levels that the writing profile specifies (discourse, sentence, lexico-grammatical features)
- Metaphor: quality

Text: For our Country

1. What is an Auftrag? (Look up in the dictionary). What purpose does it serve?

2. Look over the political appeal For our Country. How is the text structured? In which parts can it be divided? How many parts are there? How would you call the different parts?

3. Which language means are used in this appeal, e.g. what specific words or grammatical forms are used? List examples from the text.
   - a. The "we" form (we, our, us)
   - b.
   - c.
   - d.

4. Read the appeal and answer the following questions:
   - a. Who speaks in this appeal? Who is the targeted audience?
   - b. How is "our country" represented and described?
   - c. Which two alternatives are contrasted? List the expressions from the text. Which alternative is preferred?
     - Either
     - Or
   - d. To which professions do the people who signed the appeal belong? List examples from the text.

Transition of the German task sheet for the writing assignment Auftrag ("Political or Public Appeal")

Level III

Theme III, Topic 1

Task: Public appeal
As an engaged student and citizen, you are well informed about hot topics and problems at Georgetown University as well as around the world. At this point, you are actively involved with a particular topic/problem. To address this problem, you write a public appeal, which you want to publicly present and publish.

Your public appeal should have the following parts:
- an engaging title
- description of the problem
- one or more suggestions how to solve it
- an appeal to concrete action

The goal of your public appeal is to motivate the audience to act. The style of your appeal (formal, informal) depends on the particular audience that you want to reach.

Content
The political appeals that we have worked on in class ("For our Country" and appeal by Stefan Heym) serve as the basis for this assignment. Particularly relevant are organizational structure and rhetorical means employed by the model texts.

The following points need to be present in your appeal:
- you define the topic of the appeal: it can either concern the world politics or life at Georgetown University
- your audience and your relationship to it must be clearly identifiable
- place and date, on which you publicly present your appeal
- description of the problem, including background information for and effects of the problem
- suggestion(s) how to solve the problem, e.g. made by presenting alternatives or contrasts
- appeal for concrete action — what should readers/listeners do?
- signer(s): individual or as a fictive group

Language focus
- on the discourse level:
  - describe, justify, persuade, call for action
- on the sentence level:
  - complex syntax (focus on the correct verb position):
    - relative clauses for describing
    - temporal clauses for defining time periods
    - dependent clauses for justifying (e.g., "because")
  - use of adjectives to describe (focus on correct adjective endings)
  - imperative sentences addressed to the audience to call for action
- on the word level:
  - relevant to the chosen topic vocabulary
  - use of rhetorical devices typical for a public appeal

Writing process: preparation workahoes, first draft, and revision. Length: 1.5-2 pages, double-spaced.

Assessment criteria:
The three categories of task, content, and language focus are weighed equally. The overall grade is an average of the three grades for these categories. You can improve your grade for the second draft maximally up to 5 points (very good revision: improvement by 6 points, e.g. from B- to B+; good revision: improvement by 3 points, e.g. from B to B+; satisfactory or poor revision: no improvement of the grade).
Translation of a parody on the genre “Poetical or Public Appeal” (Aufruf)

Dear fellow drinkers of (Building) ICC!

Our coffee is stuck in a deep crisis. Up to now, we have drunk and endured the common stuff. (And) have said nothing. To have uttered a voice of protest - that we have not dared till now. But each person smells it and no one can escape the odor stuck in the ICC. Now, we call on you to support our initiative and fight against the bad taste of the coffee-bigwigs!

A year ago, we rejoiced that finally a café in our building was opened. No more would we have to push the heavy doors to the outside. No more would we have to battle the cold in winter in order to get a cup of coffee or tea. Our dreams were fulfilled. At least, so we thought. Today, we stand before an unforeseeable situation, in which unfulfilled coffee conditions have led to monstrous disappointment.

This crisis, dear coffee addicts, has to do with a considerably worsened quality of the beans which up to now we have accepted without question. If we want to take on the goal to no longer tolerate this coffee, then only two ways out of the danger remain (for us).

Either
We can look forward each morning to a fresh, hot coffee in the ICC and begin the day right.

Or
We must swallow unsatisfied each morning cup after cup of old and cold coffee. A more miserable life could not exist.

The administration is old hat [lit: cold coffee].
Guidelines for Creating Genre-based Writing Tasks

Decisions regarding creation of a writing assignment at a particular point in a course are made based on an intricate interrelationship between a) course content, b) a variety of genres through which this content is realized, and c) particular learning goals of the course specified in terms of (a) and (b). Convergence of these three factors should ensure the acquisition of both appropriate content and novel linguistic features tied to generic conventions that would push learner interlanguage development. Since language learning occurs as a result of language use in meaningful ways, we should aim to create an authentic need to mean for the learners by contextualizing writing tasks within discursive practices of the target culture.

1. Choose a particular course unit for which you want to create a writing assignment. Looking at all content materials that are used for the unit, consider two levels of content that will inform the shape your task will take on:
   a. Genre as context: Imagine all possible genres that could act as textual frames for the assignment. In other words, what genres are habitually used in the target language culture to deal with a particular content? What kinds of genres are the students likely to be already familiar with? Keep the instructional level of the classroom in mind—not only in regards to the level of language and the level of engagement with the content that you expect of the learners, but also in terms of what textual models they have been exposed to in instruction, or could be realistically exposed to in instruction. What kind of language would those genres require of the learners? What kinds of stages/moves gets the genre context?
   b. Situation as context: Imagine all possible situations, or scenarios, that could serve as specific contexts for the assignment. Again, keep the instructional level of the classroom in mind. What kind of language would these situations require of the learners? What would the learners be practicing/learning (at the sentence level, at the larger discourse level)? How would learners be engaging with the content at hand?

2. From a different angle, consider the different meanings that are being constructed in the assignment. The Systemic Functional Linguistics (SFL) Framework of a tripartite meaning structure is a useful one for getting at the relationship between language and context:
   a. Ideational meaning: What are we talking about?
   b. Interpersonal meaning: Who are the participants involved? (and what is their relationship to each other?)
   c. Textual meaning: What role does language play? (and how are cohesion and coherence created?)

3. Once you have determined a genre and situational framework for your task, once again look more carefully through the texts that are used for the unit. Consider which ones of them represent the best examples of the genre that you chose for the task and could be used to model this genre in the classroom; choose the ones that could potentially provide the greatest learning opportunities for your students at the respective level. At this point, you may realize (as certainly did we, many times) that you don’t have an appropriate textual model for your students to emulate. Unless your students can be expected to be thoroughly familiar with the chosen genre and its conventions, you may want to consider finding a good textual example and including it in instructional materials (it may prove to be a good limina test of your students’ readings regarding genre-content compatibility in the real world).

4. Now you can begin writing up the guidelines. The following four major sections should be addressed:
   a. The Writing Task: Here, you will want to briefly describe the scenario motivating the task. This is where the major contextual variables are presented, i.e., actors involved, textual mode of the assignment, and content focus. Based on this short description, students should get a good sense of the register required for the assignment. This is also where basic expectations are spelled out in terms of genre, i.e., the obligatory, or optional, moves of which the genre is made up.

b. Content Focus: Here, you will want to delineate your expectations of students' engagement level with the content foci. Additionally, make sure to specify if students are to incorporate, or respond to, text materials from class.

c. Language Focus: This is where you specify what kind of language the students should be drawing on in order to adequately accomplish the task. The guidelines presented here should be seen as linguistic tools for the students as they write. These should address discourse-level features (e.g., sentence types, the linking of sentences with the help of discourse markers), sentence-level features (e.g., conjugation, word order, case, etc.), and lexicogrammatical-level features (e.g., use of specific lexical items and collocations that are topic-appropriate and possibly discussed prior in class). To clarify for the students further assessment criteria that you will be using to grade their work, you may also make explicit expectations of language use in terms of accuracy, complexity and fluency.

d. Writing and Task Conventions: Here, you will want to clarify all other expectations that you have for the assignment, including writing process (one or two drafts), spelling/capitalization, submission deadline, and, yes -- the student's favorite -- text length.

5. Once you have created a draft of assignment, use the following questions to check whether your assignment truly reflects a task:

   a. What is the communicative purpose of the text students are asked to produce?

   b. Is the assignment primarily meaning-based (as opposed to a form-focused language exercise that involves practicing grammar forms or using vocabulary for the sole sake of practicing these forms)?

   c. Is the emphasis on language in context (as opposed to "straightforward" semantic meanings)? This is similar to the above question on how the lexicon is employed in the assignment.

   d. What is the role of the writer in the assignment? Does she/he act as user of the language, or solely as learner?

   e. Does the assignment reflect a real-world communicative event, or is it merely a classroom writing exercise?

6. Now, consider how assessment of the task will be handled. A good framework is the three-part structure of task appropriateness (a combination of "The Writing Task" heading and certain "Task Conventions"), content focus and language focus (also include here spelling and capitalization conventions) -- as represented in the guidelines:

   a. Task Appropriateness

   b. Content Focus

   c. Language Focus: (1) Discourse-level; (2) Sentence-level

As you convert the learner expectations to the assessment criteria, you may find that certain items in the guidelines need to be revised. This anticipated wash-back effect is very important to the task writing process. If you want to hold the students accountable for something to be graded, then you need to make that explicit in your expectations to them. Often such items are not immediately noticeable when drawing up task guidelines -- and sometimes they take much longer to come to light!

7. Assessment should be intimately linked to the pedagogical practices. Therefore, at this point you should consider -- if you haven't already done so -- what and how you would need to teach your students in order for them to successfully complete a particular writing assignment. Consider to what degree genre specifications are (un)familiar to your learners and how you can address the gaps through explicit modeling and joint construction phases of instruction. Good luck!

Workshop Part 4: Describing and Assessing Student Performance on Genre-Based Tasks

I. Text Appropriation, Intertextuality and Advanced L2 Learning

- Getting from Point A to Point B: From Gourmet Magazine to "For our Stomachs"
- What do we mean by intertextuality?
  - All language, all texts are connected to prior and subsequent texts, from explicit presence of other texts to discourse conventions evocative of particular genres, activity types, or styles
- What do we mean by text appropriation?
  - Making a text one's own via imitation

The Notion of Intertextuality and L2 Learning:

- General consensus that text appropriation is a crucial, if not necessary, component to learning process (Penneycook 1996; Schleißner & Widdowson 1999; Johnstone 2002), and plays important role in the socialization process into certain privileged discourse communities (Penneycook 1996; Currie 1998)
- Notion of appropriation in socio-cultural theory (e.g., Lantolf 2000)
- Lexical borrowings in ESL writing (Campbell 1990; Ortega 2002; Burns & Watts 2001; Pennycott 1996)
- Genre studies (Johns 1997, 2002; Swales 1990)

Why use the construct of intertextuality to conceptualize advanced, instructed L2 development?

1. Centrality of choice emphasizing the agentive and creative potential writers engage in
2. Text-based approach supports goals of content-based instruction and construction of knowledge: the context in which texts are situated, becomes contextualized
3. Richer understanding of instruction’s role in writing process: treating the learning environment, and teaching in particular, as textual entities

II. Study and Methodology

Research Questions:

1. What patterns of intertextuality pertaining to genre conventions can be identified across advanced-level L2 learner texts in relation to source texts used in instruction?
2. How do textual borrowing practices relate to the development of voice within L2 student writing?

Participants: 20 L2 students of German enrolled in two parallel 6th semester sections of course “Advanced German II: German Stories and German Histories” in Spring 2003

The Writing Task: Political appeal on open-topic, manipulation of field (i.e., content) register variable

Source Texts: Two authentic political appeals from 1989 situation in GDR: “For our Land” (For our Country) and speech by writer Stephan Heym. Third source text: parody written by GUDG instructor in 2001 based on “For our Country”

Student Texts: Topic foci of texts: calls to reform global, local and personal issues

Analysis Procedure:

1. Moves and lexicogrammatical analyses of 9 L1 German texts of the genre political appeal from modern German history web-site (LeMO), and of 3 model texts used in instruction.
2. Moves analysis of the L2 student texts
3. List of overall impressions of textual appropriation (see Appendix A)
4. Analysis of 2 crucial, obligatory moves for the genre: Problem Statement and Appeal for Action: Determination of dominant semantic categories across moves and their linguistic realizations
III. Analyses

Degrees of textual borrowing (adapted from Campbell 1990): (1) exact copies, i.e., direct quotations; (2) close copies, i.e., core content words or collocations taken from instructional model, with altered syntax, and/or additional/substituted words; and (3) alternative choices, i.e., synonymous words belonging to same semantic categories as those found in L1 instructional texts.

B. The "Appeal for Action" Move: Tracking Textual Borrowing

Examples #2: "Entweder wir können... oder wir müssen..." (Either we can... or we must...)
- opens "Appeal for Action" move in instructional model text and instructional parody text
- in original text, "either-or" structure with modal verbs used to present audience with illusion of "choice" to create difference between desirable and undesirable outcomes

IV. Discussion: Development of Learner L2 Voice and Assessment
- Acknowledging L2 students' own experiences and backgrounds: Whose intertextuality?
- Charting the act of appropriation: The role of parody in instruction (see Appendix B)
- Imagining student production: Texts, textual borrowing behavior
- Considering assessment issue: the role of textual borrowing in writing assessment (see Appendix C)
- Discussing the "horizon" issues:
  - Where to draw the lines between acceptable and unacceptable text appropriation?
  - How can we specify the relationship between naming and copying, and make this comprehensible for our students?
  - What sorts of consequences (desirable and undesirable) may result from this instructional approach? Consider students' language development, their learning strategies, their L2 (and L1) writing, their work in subsequent classes? How can any anticipated problems be handled?
  - Could explicit encouragement of textual borrowing be implied in other advanced L2 learning context? How?
